“p.m.” stands for Patricia McClelland. In 1984, she founded McClelland Enterprises, Inc., one of the first companies in the Washington, D.C. area devoted solely to computer training in the workforce. In 1994, she founded Continental Software Development Corporation, which provides programming and consulting services throughout the continental United States and Puerto Rico. Her clients have included the United States Secret Service, CIA, and Department of Defense. Her specialty is law enforcement- and intelligence-related computer technology and white collar computer crime.

She sits on the Board of Directors of The Friends of the Robeson County Library and instituted a visiting authors series entitled Writers Rally in Robeson; she is the Vice President of the Robeson County Arts Council, where she represents literary pursuits in the county; she is a co-founder of The Book 'Em Foundation, a partnership between law enforcement and authors to increase literacy, reduce crime and raise public awareness of the correlation that exists between high crime rates and high illiteracy rates; and volunteers at the Robeson County Humane Society, specifically providing dog training services to inmates through A New Leash on Life. She is the past President of Chesterfield County/ Colonial Heights, Virginia Crime Solvers and past Treasurer for The Virginia Crime Stoppers Association.
